Research Highlights

This research was designed to create a prevention model for Women’s trafficking based on economic empowerment.

The results of this study are still in the first phase of the three planned stages. In the first stage, this study produced a model design with limited trials to prevent the occurrence of trafficking in women in North Sulawesi Province.

Research Objectives

The purpose of this research is to establish a model of women’s trafficking prevention based on economic empowerment.

Methodology

Quantitative was collected by distributed questionnaires to 250 participants about community knowledge of trafficking. Qualitative was collected by indept interview to a male traffickers, 2 government officials, 10 community members, and 1 victim. We use percentage analysis to know about knowledge trafficking. Qualitative approach to demonstrate how to prevent women’s trafficking.
Results

We find many communities do not understand about human trafficking. Their knowledge of human trafficking is lacking. The governments program to empower women is not specific to prevent human trafficking. We design model of economic empowerment to prevent women’s trafficking.

Findings

We conclude that model of economic empowerment can reduce trafficking victim, because one cause is an economic factor.
