In modern times, nations as the protagonists of social progress have certainly played an important role in shaping modern civilization. However, it was not the Western countries that created this civilization. At different times, different people and countries played an important role in this common process. In other words, modern leaders are not the sole driver of social development. Therefore, the role of the incomplete civilizations of Western civilization needs to be considered in the development of society. This contribution analyzes the most appropriate relational method between modern and imperfect civilizations.
